Known for its rich CBD production, The Wife has quickly become a standard bearer for hemp flower, impressing farmers and enthusiasts alike. With a CBD:THC ratio of 20:1, this cultivar produces a broad terpene profile, giving it a “nose” that is reminiscent of cheese and diesel.

The flower structure produces well shaped “nugs” which are packed with nutrients.

In an optimal environment, The Wife reaches maturity in eight to nine weeks on average.

It’s hybrid structure exhibits both Sativa and Indica characteristics, getting both tall and bushy. The average height is four to five feet when grown at densities of an estimated 2000 plants per acre, for a dense, and during the peak of summer on the mainland.
